Chris Scolari is a trust and estates and corporate attorney with expertise in business planning and property law, including Colorado land and resource ownership and conveyance. In his practice, he is focused on working with individuals, business owners, and multi-generation families on an array of estate planning, estate administration, and probate matters ranging from the simple to complex, including the transfer of wealth and closely held businesses, as well as estate tax and gift planning, planned charitable giving, and supplemental needs trust planning.

Estate planning and wealth transfer can raise sensitive issues and questions, and Chris often works as both a legal advisor and trusted counselor, helping clients leverage legal tools to achieve their goals. He takes pride in finding practical and efficient options to achieve clients' objectives, and he actively works with other members of a client's advisory team to achieve desired and cost-effective outcomes across multiple levels.

Chris' experience also includes other transactional matters such as drafting and negotiating business contracts including governing documents, service agreements, and license agreements, as well as real property law, including Colorado land and resource ownership matters as well as related family ownership and conveyance issues.

Chris is a member of the Colorado Bar Association's Trusts and Estates Section and Tax Section and is currently pursuing a Master of Laws (LLM) degree in Taxation from the University of Denver, Sturm College of Law.
